A LETTER FROM FR. WILDES

Dear members of the Loyola community:
I hope that you enjoy this yearbook. The 2004-2005 academic year was marked by opportunities and challenges. I hope that this yearbook will be more than a collection of pictures and names. I hope it will be a happy reminder to you of the time you have spent here at Loyola. Like any year, this has been a year marked with challenges. We have lived through natural challenges like Hurricane Ivan. We have lived through human challenges like the renovation of Carrollton Hall. We have not only survived, like the winner of a TV game show, we have been made stronger as a community by events such as these.

The year has also been marked by academic and intellectual challenges. These have come to each of you in different ways. I hope that you have experienced challenges in your classes, in conversations with your professors or with your friends that have caused you to question your ideas and beliefs. I also hope that you have had the experience of disagreeing with other people about their ideas and learned that disagreement is healthy and can be done civilly. I hope this has been a year where you have found companionship in your questioning from faculty members, friends, and our staff in Student Affairs and University Ministries. I hope this year has been a challenge! I think this yearbook may serve as a reminder to you of the year. As you look through it, in the future, I hope it will trigger memories of this year. And, I hope these will not only be memories of a distant past, but of ways of thinking and living that shape your present.

With prayers and best wishes,
Kevin Wm. Wildes, S.J.

LOYOLA'S NEW

The Rev. Kevin Wildes, S.J. loves boxing. The sport is perfect for Loyola's new president, who was inaugurated on October 15, 2004, because it is time efficient. Wildes called an hour of boxing one of the best workouts in the world and said he tries to go to the gym at least a couple of times a week. Then it's back to his busy schedule. When Wildes stepped into the ring he was greeted by some daunting heavyweights. The interim president the Rev. William Byron, S.J. had left Wildes an inheritance abundance of controversy including a new athletic scholarship program, law suits over the Carrollton Hall repairs and students up in arms over a censored play.

Wildes welcomed the challenges.

"Being president of a strong institution that wants to be better taps into my competitive edge," Wildes said.

"Being president of a strong institution that wants to be better taps into my competitive edge," Wildes said.

In his inaugural year Wildes' most public controversy has been his decision to allow students to participate in National V-Day by staging Eve Ensler's "The Vagina Monologues" on campus Feb. 14. Last year Byron had banned the play.

When Archbishop Alfred Hughes rebuked Wildes for permitting what he called a play "contrary to sound Catholic teaching," the local media aired the debate on the six-o'clock news and ran a front-page article in Tthe Times-Picayune.

Wildes said he called the archbishop to tell him of Loyola's decision in advance.

"I knew given the history that he wouldn't be happy," Wildes said. "I didn't want him finding out from anyone else."

Wildes said he and Hughes have spoken since.

"You can disagree with people and get along," he said.

For what Wildes said was the first time in 11 or 12 years, the philosophy Ph.D. did not teach a course in the fall semester. He resumed his place at the chalkboard in the Spring semester with a Monday night 3-hour Medical Ethics lecture. Meeting once a week with his class allowed him to devote the rest of his week to his many other duties.

One campaign that Wildes has given much of his attention in his first year has been visiting with Alumni Chapters. He said he hopes by the end of May of this year to have visited all of them. Increasing donations from alumni is an area that Wildes said Loyola can improve.

Wildes said the litigations that are delaying repairs of the mold damage in the 3-year-old Carrollton Hall are a source of much frustration for him because he feels that he can't get around to things that he wants to get done. The Cabra Hall dormitory is one of the things next on his list but Wildes says he needs those beds available until construction on Carrollton is finished.

Improving dorms is part of Wildes plan to make

by Gigi Alford

Loyola more of a residential institution. But he says building a campus life is more than just beds, it is improving the quality of life on campus.

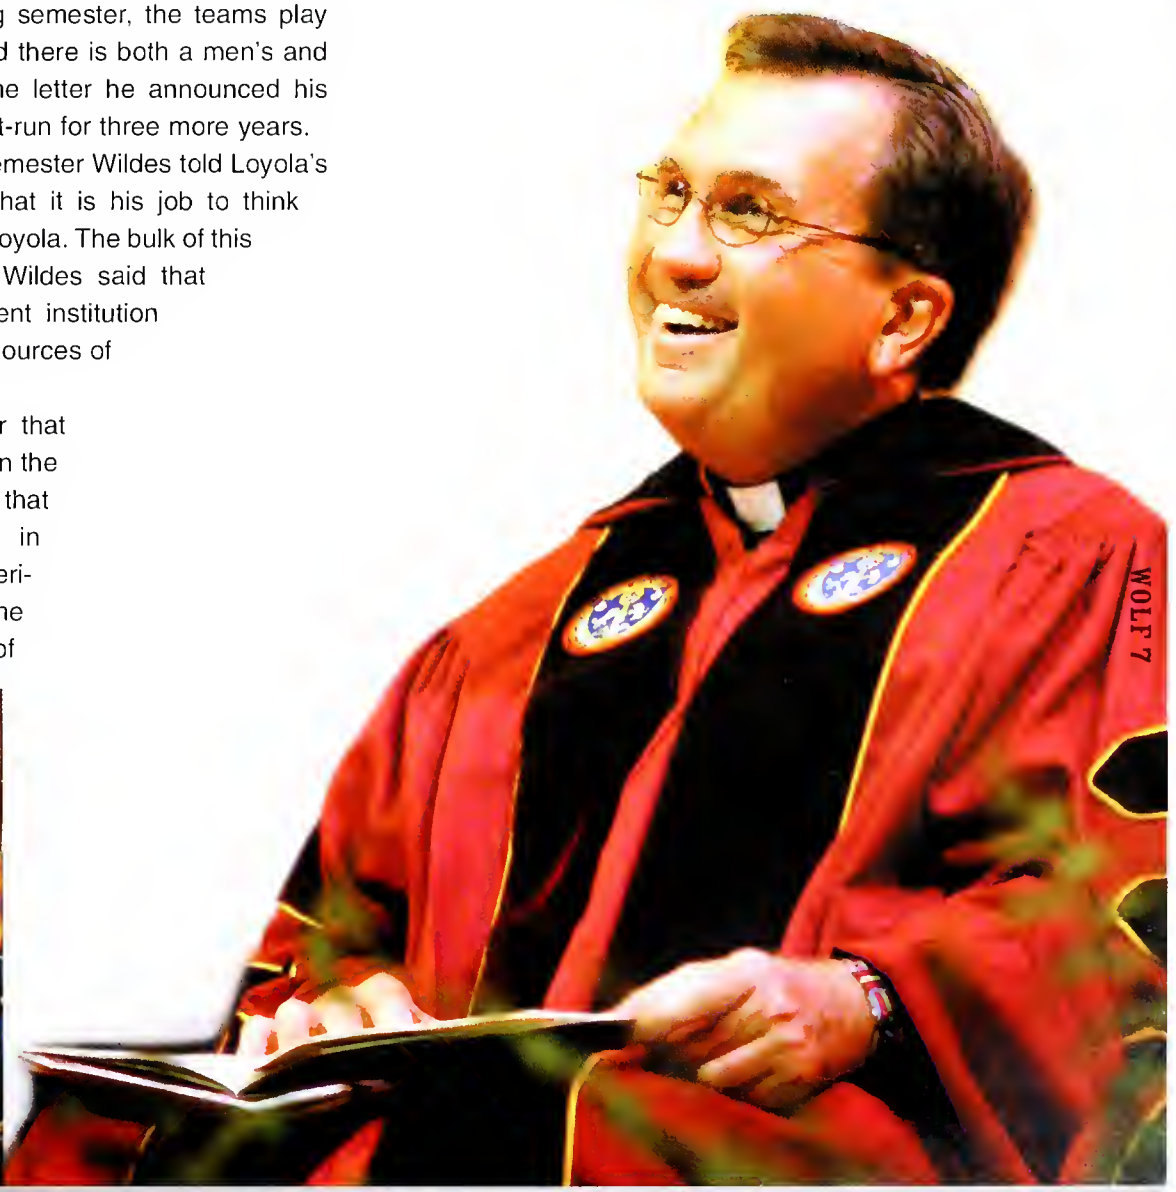
"A piece of that is athletics," Wildes said.

He plans to work on sports on three levels: recreational, club and intercollegiate. Loyola has already taken a big step in improving intercollegiate sports by funding six athletic scholarships for the athletic department; three for the men's basketball team and three for the women's basketball team.

In one of the many letters that Wildes sent to the Loyola community over the course of the year he explained that the administration chose basketball to test the scholar-athlete program because its season runs in the Fall and Spring semester, the teams play their games on campus and there is both a men's and women's team. In the same letter he announced his decision to continue the test-run for three more years. In an interview in the Fall semester Wildes told Loyola's newspaper, The Maroon, that it is his job to think about the bigger picture of Loyola. The bulk of this big picture is fundraising. Wildes said that Loyola is a tuition-dependent institution and he is looking for other sources of revenue.

Another big contender that Wildes squared off against in the ring was Hurricane Ivan that threatened New Orleans in October. It was his first experience of a hurricane and he had the responsibility of deciding whether or not to close the school and evacuate the dorms.

So far Wildes has taken on his opponents pound-for-pound and it looks like the new president will be taking the gloves off and knocking out some things on his list.



CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS

SGA

As members of the SGA, we pledge to represent our constituents and fulfill the duties of the office which we hold. We will not let selfishness, greed, or other interests affect the decisions that we are about to make. We hope that those who follow will recognize the qualities that we vow to portray, as those of true and selfless leaders.

THE MAROON

The Maroon: a paper above all others

By Joe Lobo
Maroon Historian

I believe Aristotle put it best when he once said something really smart about journalism and how people should "really dig the news, man." I don't have the exact quote, but I feel like the spirit of it still lives on in the pages of The Maroon, Loyola's only student newspaper.

And the kids do indeed dig the news at The Maroon — so much so that they rarely leave the news office.

Chief copy editor Gene Guillot, communications junior is often seen lying supine on one of the office's many flea-infested couches.

"Leave me alone, I just had Dunbar's," the loveably cantankerous Guillot said. "I've caught the post-chicken and red beans malaise," he added.

Clearly Guillot and the rest of The Maroon staff love their chicken — especially Mama Dunbar's recipe — but if there's one thing they love more than chicken, it's reporting and, um, the whole picure-taking thing.

"I swear to God I'm killing the next person who hands in a photo request the day of the shoot," said photo editor and communications senior Gillian Dicker.

Co-photo editor and communications senior Ann Hermes agreed with Dicker, offering a personal antecdote from the previous day.

"Naomi King, our Life and Times editor gave me a photo request at 3:30 to shoot a concert at 3:45 and I was all, like, 'Whoa, whoa there Naomi, don't make me go jedi all over you. Because I will! I will do it! I have a lightsaber, and I use the force,'" Hermes said, biting a passerby on the arm for emphasis. "But then I was like,'You're lucky, my lightsaber is at home. I'll go pick it up and get my camera and shoot the concert after that.' It was a real tense moment."

But the staff of The Maroon is no stranger to tense moments. In addition to Hermes' frequent bouts with "Star Wars"-related brawling, the staff has seen its share of cuts, scrapes, bruises and gaping wounds. All in the name of the news.

"I got into an argument with our news editor Chuck Alexander over who would win in a fight, Fox 8 meteoroligist Bob Breck or Communications professor Larry Lorenz," said Daniel Monteverde, communications sophomore and The Maroon's design editor.

"I told him, flat out, that Larry would destroy anyone in a fight," said Alexander, "but he just wouldn't listen. He kept talking about how Breck could predict the weather and he would have an advantage."

"Bob Breck, knows the weather, he would know if there was a chill in the air ahead of time and he would dress accordingly; he could put on a sweater," Monteverde asserted.

"A chill's not going to stop a Lorenz," Alexander emphasized. "Why would you even think it could, you design wimp?"

Edited, written and produced by students, The Maroon is both the voice of student opinion and a forum for every member of the university community — students, faculty, administration, staff and alumni.

"That's it, let's rumble, word jockey!" Monteverde yelled as he bounded across the room toward the frightened and utterly defenseless news editor.

Fights are commonplace in the newsroom, but that's not to say that there aren't any calming influences.

"Katie Ide is like the office mom," stated sports editor Gigi Alford, communications senior, "She treats us like the children she never wants to have."

"I guess when you think about it, The Maroon really is like a child to me," stated Ide, communications senior and managing editor. "It can get smelly, it annoys a lot of people, and you can't abandon it at Wal-Mart without repercussions, but in the end you really do love it...Because you have to."

Communications junior and op/ed editor Lisa Campo agrees, sort of, "We all really enjoy working on The Maroon, because for some of us, it's the last time we will ever be in charge of anything," Campo said. "By the way, if I have a kid, I'm never leaving it alone with Katie Ide," she added.

One fact that Maroon-staffers can all agree upon is their love for faculty advisor Liz Scott, associate professor of communications.

"P.Scott! We love P.Scott! She's the best advisor EVER!" said Life and Times editor Naomi King, communications junior.

But it's Scott herself that puts it best when she is often heard muttering from her office, "I can't believe I work here. I really need a drink."

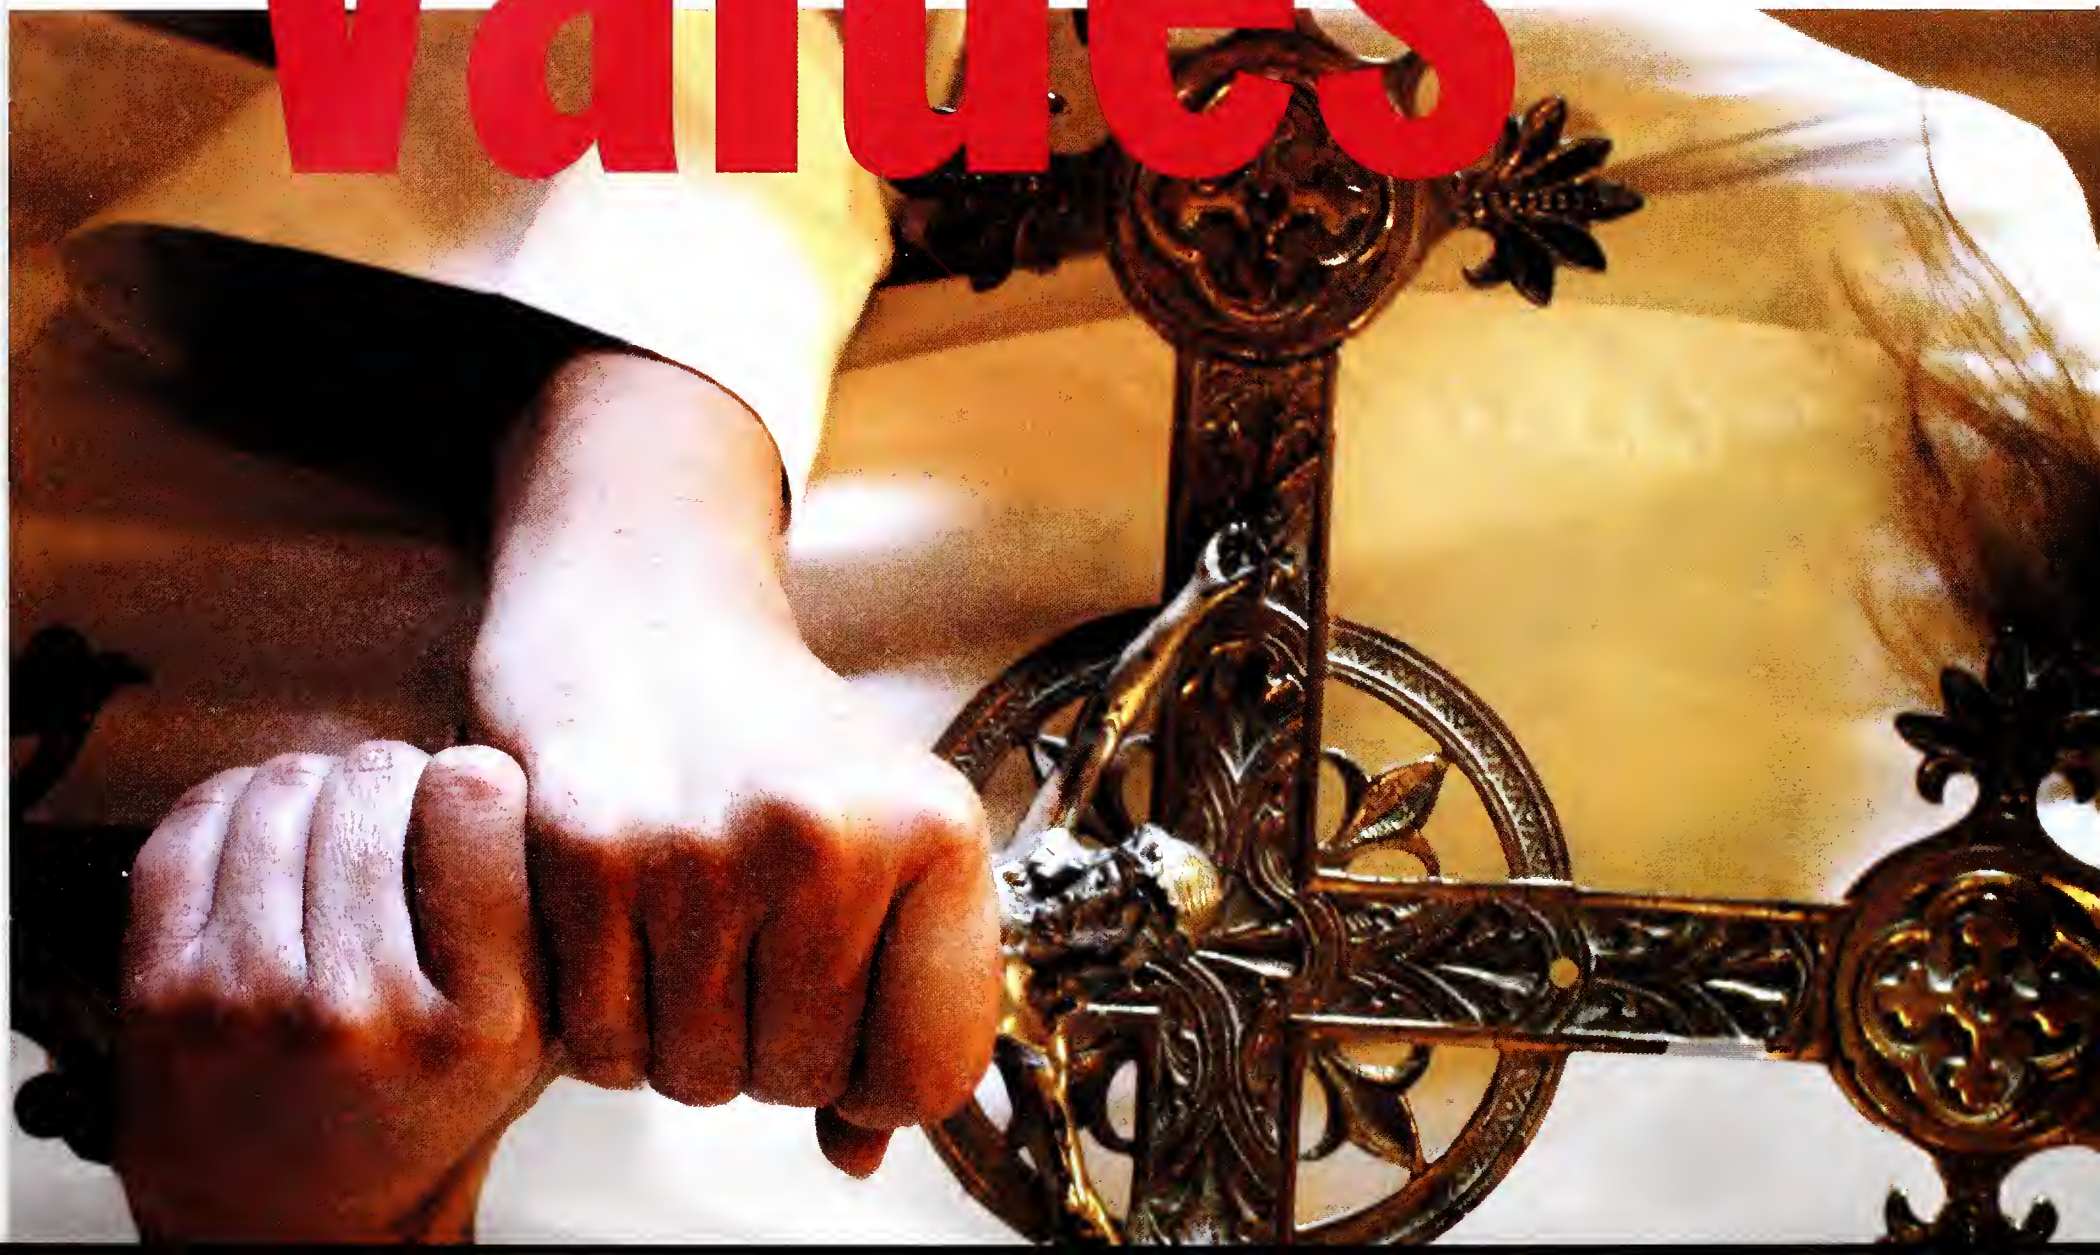
Values



in Action

by Fr. Si Hendry, S.J.

Jesuit Mission and Identity Activities at Loyola

In its 32nd General Congregation held in 1975, the Society of Jesus committed itself to its contemporary mission of "the service of faith and the promotion of justice."

Adding to the Loyola tradition of students actively working for faith and justice, this year student leadership also worked to develop the distinctive Jesuit component of reflection.

The Awakening Retreat, completely organized and run by students, continued to help students reflect on their faith, while developing a lively community spirit and a commitment to incarnating faith in service to others.

The Justice Council continued to provide programs to educate the campus and help students reflect on issues of social justice. Their fall program, "Everyday Justice," focused on the racism we encounter in our normal lives and strategies for dealing with its institutionalization.

LUCAP, while continuing its active involvement in service projects such as Hunger Relief and Habitat for Humanity, worked to develop reflection on the justice issues involved in the service projects, for examplesuch as finding ways to address the institutional causes of hunger and homelessness. LUCAP also decided to reflect on the way Loyola University lives its commitment to the Jesuit vision by undertaking a social justice "audit" of the university.

Big Brothers / Big Sisters, continuing to provide relationships and guidance to needy youngsters, was directed more by its own student leadership. Students not only participated in the alumni project, of Wolves on the Prowl, but helped add a reflective component to the service by formulating questions that discussion leaders could use to help people become aware of the larger issues involved. Take Back the Night worked to educate and mobilize students around about violence toward women.

Student leaders Martina Mills of SGA the Student Government Association and Kathleen Goodrich of Big Brothers / Big Sisters gave presentations on spirituality at a faculty, -staff- and student panel discussion during Loyola Week.

All these projects expressed student initiative and leadership that raised awareness of and contributed to the Jesuit character of Loyola.

ORD SON

The Loyola women's basketball team experienced a season of firsts in the 2004-05 school year. The Wolfpack set records for wins with 21 and conference wins with 11. Then, the team accomplished the biggest first in team history.

Loyola was selected to play in the NAIA national tournament in Jackson, Tenn. Unfortunately, the 'Pack met two-time defending champion Southern Nazarene in the first round of the 32-team tournament. Southern Nazarene beat Loyola 86-55. That loss, however, did not take away from the great season the team had.

Four players made the all-conference team and the team finished in third place in the Gulf Coast Athletic Conference. Marjorie Bilinski, finance sophomore, made the team for the second straight year. She led the team with 14.7 points per game in the season but was unable to play in the national tournament due to a torn posterior cruciate ligament.

General studies sophomore Kiely Schork led the country in 3-pointers made with 145, including seven in the national tournament game. Dani Holland, criminal justice senior, averaged 12.9 points a game and 8.9 rebounds. Sociology senior Joelle Bordelon finished her career for the Wolfpack with an all-GCAC season. During the season, she scored her 1,000th career point and averaged 25 points a game in the conference tournament. For the season, she averaged 11.5 points a game and 7.8 assists, which was second in the nation.

Opinion Poll Question:

"What words of WISDOM do you have

"When you get a job, send some money to the athletic department."

Joelle Bordelon, Sociology Senior

Dani Holland, Criminal Justice Junior

"Don't throw away change because you're that much closer to being a millionare."

Ashleigh Nushawg, Communications Sophomore

"PERSEVERE."

Larry Lorenz, Communications Professor

for the graduating Senior class?

"Challenge yourself, don't limit yourself, and learn to appreciate the little things in life."

Nathan Martin, Music Education Junior

"Okay, plan a date in six months with whoever and if y'all don't have a job yet and demand your tuition money back."

Lola Thelin, Communications Senior

"No matter how busy the real world gets, you should always make time for friends."

Jenna Cronin, Music Business Senior

Kaila Guillotte, History Senior

THE END

What a long, strange trip it's been.
